What are cookies?

Cookies are small text strings that the sites visited by the user send to their terminal, where they are stored before being re-transmitted to the same sites at the next visit by the same user.

For this purpose, cookies are technical and profiling, depending on the function for which they are used, and in first-party and third-party cookies, depending on the person who installs them.

Technical cookies: they are used only for "Transmitting information over an electronic communication network or for what is strictly necessary to the provider of a company service explicitly requested by the subscriber or user to provide this service".

They are divided into:

- Session cookies, which guarantee the normal navigation and function of the site;
- analytical cookies, similar to technical cookies only under the conditions set out in the Guarantor's Clarifications of June 2015;
- functional cookies, which allow the user to browse according to a series of selected criteria (for example, the language, etc.).

Profiling cookies: these are those aimed at creating user profiles and are used in order to send advertising messages in accordance with the preferences shown by the user in the context of navigation.

Third-party Cookies: cookie of a site other than the one the user is visiting, installed through the latter.
